

CHAPTER XV

Stating Another Kind of Vision and Communication which Most Holy Mary Had with the Holy Angels of Her Guard.

643. Such is the force and efficacy of divine grace and the love it causes in the creature that it can blot out in him the very images of sin and the earthly nature of man (I Cor. 15:49), and form in him a new being and celestial image whose conversation is in heaven (Philip. 3:20), understanding, loving and operating not any more as a creature of earth but as a being celestial and divine, for the force of love ravishes the heart and soul by which the creature lives, sacrificing and transforming them into that which he loves. This Christian truth believed by all, understood by the learned, and experienced by the saints, must be conceived as fulfilled in our great Queen and Lady in so privileged a manner that neither by the example of what was experienced by the saints, nor by the intellect of the angels, can it ever be comprehended or explained. Most holy Mary, being the Mother of the incarnate Word, was Mistress of all creation, yet being a faithful representation of her onlybegotten Son She in imitation of Him made so little use of creatures of which She was Mistress that none ever used them less than She did, for She excluded all that was not absolutely necessary for the service of the Most High and for the natural life of her most holy Son and Herself.

644. To this forgetfulness and withdrawal from all that was earthly corresponded her conversation with all that was heavenly, and this was proportionate to her dignity of Mother of God himself and the Lady of heaven, the earthly communication being thus properly transformed into heavenly communication. It followed as a natural consequence for the Queen and Mistress of the Angels to enjoy singular privileges in regard to the attention paid to Her by the heavenly courtiers, her vassals, and She treated and conferred with them in a more exalted manner than all human creatures, no matter how holy they were. In chapter XXIII of the first Book I have said something of the diverse ordinary visions by which the holy Angels and Seraphim, who were destined and selected for her guard, manifested themselves to our Queen and Mistress, and in the preceding chapter I explained in general the manner and form of the divine visions conceded to Her, having been careful to keep in mind that in all their wide range and sphere they were supremely exalted and divine in their nature, their manner, and their effects upon her most holy soul.

645. In this chapter I will treat of another kind of vision, still more singular and privileged, which the Most High granted to most holy Mary and by which She communicated and visibly treated with the holy Angels of her guard and with the rest who in behalf of the Lord visited Her on diverse occasions. This mode of vision and communication was of the same kind as that by which each one of the supernal spirits knows the others as they are in themselves, without any other image to move the intellect than the very substance and nature of the angel thus known. The superior angels illumine the inferior, making known to them the hidden mysteries which the Most High reveals and manifests immediately to the higher angels for transmission to the lower, for this manner of communicating with them is befitting the greatness and infinite majesty of the highest King and Governor of all creation. From this it can easily be seen this most orderly illumination and revelation is a favor which is superadded to the essential glory of the holy angels, for the essential glory they obtain immediately from the Divinity, each one receiving the vision and fruition of God according to the measure of his merits. One angel cannot create essential happiness in another by illuminating him or revealing to him a mystery, for the one who is illuminated would not thereby see God face to face, without which he cannot be in beatitude or attain to his last end.

646. But since the Object is infinite and like a voluntary mirror, there are infinite secrets and mysteries besides those which pertain to the beatific knowledge of the saints which God can reveal to the saints, and which He reveals to them especially in the government of his Church in the world, and in these revelations He follows the course which I am explaining. Since these revelations are outside of the essential glory, the lack of these revelations cannot be called ignorance in the angels or a privation of knowledge, but rather it is called nescience or negation, while revelation is called illumination, or a purgation or purification* of that nescience. According to our mode of understanding it could be compared to the process which takes place when the rays of the sun pass through many crystals in succession, making all partake of the same light from the first to the last, touching first those that are closest. Only one difference must be noted in this comparison: The prisms or crystals are entirely passive in this process in respect to the rays, without having any more activity than that given by the sun which illumines all by one operation; but the holy angels are passive in receiving the enlightenment and active in communicating it to their inferiors, and moreover they communicate their light with praise, admiration and love, all derived from the supreme Sun of justice, the eternal and immutable God.

647. Into this admirable and divine order of revelation the Most High introduced most holy Mary so She could enjoy these privileges which the courtiers of heaven possessed as proper to their nature. For this purpose He appointed the Seraphim whom I have mentioned in chapter XIV of the first Book, because they were supreme and nearest to the Divinity; also other Angels of her guard performed the same office when and how it was necessary and appropriate according to the divine will. All of these Angels and others their Queen and ours knew in themselves, without dependence upon the senses and the phantasy, and without any hindrance from her mortal and earthly body. Through this vision and knowledge the Seraphim and other Angels of the Lord illumined and purified† Her, revealing to their Queen many mysteries which for that very purpose they had learned from the Most High. And though this kind of illumination and intellectual vision was not continual in most holy Mary it was very frequent, especially when in order to give Her opportunity for more merits and divine movements of love the Lord hid or absented Himself from Her, as shall be described afterwards (Con. 725-6; Tran. 8-9). On such occasions He made use of this office of the Angels, allowing their enlightenment to proceed in its order until it was communicated to their Queen.

648. This mode of illumination did not derogate from the dignity of the Mother of God and Lady of the Angels, for in the conferring of these benefits the mode of their participation was not to be determined by the dignity and sanctity of our sovereign Queen, since in that She was superior to all the angelic orders, but rather by the present state and condition of her nature in which She was inferior,△ for She was yet a wayfarer and of a human, bodily and mortal nature. By these illuminations She was to be raised to the angelic operation and estate though yet living in mortal flesh and subject to the natural use of the senses, and though it was a great privilege yet it was entirely proper to her sanctity and dignity. I believe the hand of the Most High has extended this favor to other souls in mortal life, though not so frequently as to his most holy Mother, nor with such a plenitude and under such exalted conditions as in Her. If many doctors

(not without great foundation) conceded that St. Paul, Moses, and other saints have enjoyed the beatific vision, it is credible that other earthly wayfarers have shared this kind of knowledge of the angelic nature, for this favor is no more than to see intuitively the angelic substance. Regarding clearness this vision corresponds to the first one I have mentioned in the foregoing chapter, and in regard to the intellectual qualities it corresponds to the third mentioned in the same place, though it does not proceed by means of imprinted images.

649. The truth is this privilege is not ordinary or common, but very rare and extraordinary, and hence demands in the soul a great preparation and purity of conscience. It is incompatible with earthly affections, voluntary imperfections, or any inclination toward sin, for in order for the soul to enter into the angelic order it must lead a life more angelic than human, since if this similarity and agreement is lacking the union of such extremes would imply a monstrous disproportion. With divine grace, however, the creature (though yet in an earthly and corruptible body) can deny itself all that is demanded by its passions and inclinations, die to all visible things, eject from its memory all images of them, and live more in the spirit than in the flesh. And when it arrives at the enjoyment of true peace, tranquility, and quiet of spirit, which cause in it a sweet and loving serenity in the possession of the highest Good, then it is less incapable of being raised to the vision of the angelic spirits by intuitive clearness, receiving the divine revelations which they communicate to each other, and experiencing the admirable effects of this kind of vision.

650. If the revelations which our sovereign Queen received corresponded to her purity and love, their value cannot be estimated by men. The light communicated to Her in the vision of the Seraphim is beyond human comparison, for to a certain extent the image of the Divinity is flashed from them as from most pure spiritual mirrors in which most holy Mary perceived Him in all his infinite attributes and perfections. By some of the effects of this vision were also manifested to Her in an admirable manner the glory of these same Seraphim, because much of this is perceived in seeing intuitively the angelic essence. By the insight into these things She was entirely inflamed and enkindled with divine love and many times rapt in wonderful ecstasy; there, in union with the Seraphim and the Angels, She broke forth in canticles of praise, celebrating the incomparable glory of the Divinity in such a manner that She excited the admiration of the heavenly spirits themselves, for though She was enlightened by them regarding the intellect, yet by her own acts of the will She left them far behind, and with a much greater force of love did She quickly ascend and arrive at union with the ultimate and highest Good, from whom She immediately received new influences of the torrent of the Divinity (Ps. 35:9) by which She was inundated. And if the Seraphim had not been enjoying the presence of the infinite Object which was the beginning and the terminus of their beatific love, they could well have been the pupils of their most holy Queen in divine love, just as She was theirs in regard to the illumination of the mind derived from them.

651. Next to the immediate vision of the spiritual and angelic substance, the more inferior intellectual vision of the same by infused species is more common, as we said also of the abstractive vision of the Divinity. This kind of vision the Queen of heaven sometimes enjoyed, but it was not so common with Her as the one mentioned, for though in other just souls the privilege of seeing the angels and saints by means of intellectual images is very rare and precious, yet in the Queen of the Angels it was not necessary because She had a more exalted communication and knowledge of them. She therefore enjoyed this inferior kind of vision only when the Lord ordained that the Angels would hide themselves, and when the more exalted communion with them was to be interrupted for her greater merit and practice of virtue. At such times She saw them by intellectual or imaginary species as mentioned in the previous chapter.

Divine effects are produced in other souls by these visions of angels through intellectual images, for these celestial beings become known to the mind in their quality as executors and ambassadors of the supreme King, and with them the soul holds sweet colloquy concerning the Lord himself and all that is celestial and earthly, being entirely illumined, taught, corrected, governed, guided and induced to raise itself to the perfect union of divine love, and to work what is most pure, perfect, holy and unblemished in the spiritual life.

INSTRUCTION OF THE QUEEN OF HEAVEN, MARY MOST HOLY.

652. Admirable, my daughter, is the love, the fidelity, and the solicitude with which the angelic spirits assist mortals in their necessities, and most horrible is the forgetfulness, ingratitude and grossness on the part of men in failing to acknowledge this debt. In the bosom of the Most High, whose face they see in beatific clearness (Mt. 18:10), these heavenly spirits perceive the infinite paternal love of the Father in heaven for earthly men, and therefore they appreciate and estimate worthily the blood of the Lamb by which men were bought and rescued, and they know the value of the souls thus purchased with the treasures of the Divinity. From this arise their watchfulness and attention in securing the interests of the souls who because of the value set upon them by the Most High have been given into their charge. I desire thee to understand well how by the ministry of these angels mortals would receive great enlightenment and incomparable favors from the Lord if only they did not hinder them by their sins and abominations, and by their disregard of such an inestimable benefit. But since they block up the way which God with ineffable providence has opened up for conducting them to eternal felicity, the greater part of them damn themselves, whereas with the protection of the angels and with a proper estimate of his blessings they could save themselves.

653. O my dearest daughter, since many men are so indifferent in attending to the paternal works of my Son and Lord, I seek in thee a special gratitude for this blessing. Since He has dealt with thee liberally in his appointment of Angels for thy guard, be attentive in their company and listen to their injunctions with reverence; give thyself over to their guidance, honor them as the ambassadors of the Most High, and seek their favor, so having been cleansed of thy sins, freed from imperfections, and inflamed with divine love, thou mayest become so spiritualized as to be fit to treat with them as their companion in the participation of the divine illuminations, which He shall not withhold from thee if thou on thy part dispose thyself in the manner I desire.

654. Since thou hast desired to know, in the spirit of obedience, what was the reason that the holy Angels communicated with me in so many kinds of visions, I shall respond to thy desires, explaining more clearly what thou hast understood and written with the aid of divine light. The cause of this privilege was, on the part of the Most High, his most generous love with which He pursued me, and on my part the state of pilgrimage in which I then found myself, for it was neither possible nor proper for this life to be altogether uniform in regard to the acts of virtue by which the divine Wisdom desired to raise me above all creation. Since this pilgrimage was to be undergone by me as a human wayfarer, subject to the use of the senses with all the various coincidences of life in the practice of virtue, I sometimes acted altogether in a spiritual manner and without the hindrance of the senses when the Angels communicated with me as they do among themselves; at other times it was necessary for me to suffer and be afflicted in the lower part of my soul or in my sensitive faculties; at still other times I suffered want, loneliness, and interior dereliction. According to the vicissitudes of these different effects and conditions I received the favors and visits of the holy Angels, many times speaking to them by the intelligence, at other times by imaginary vision, and at other times by corporeal and sensible vision, according to the demands of my state and necessity and the ordainment of the Most High.

655. By all these means my faculties and senses were illumined and sanctified through the divine influences and blessings so I could experience in reality all these operations, and through all of them receive the influx of supernatural grace. But regarding these favors, my dearest daughter, I desire thee to remember that although God acted with such magnificent mercy toward me, He nevertheless followed his intention of conferring them upon me so lavishly not only because of my dignity as his Mother, but also because He took into account my cooperation and disposition by which I cooperated with his graces on my part. I withdrew all my faculties and senses from communication with created things, and rejecting all that was merely sensible and created, turned to the highest Good and centered all the powers of my will on his holy love. In this disposition of my soul I sanctified all my faculties by cooperation with these favors, visions and illuminations, having evacuated them of all human and terrestrial pleasures. So great was the reward of my works in mortal flesh that thou canst not understand or describe it while thou art a pilgrim on earth. Such is the liberality of the Most High that He makes an advance payment of blessings in this life as a pledge of those He has reserved for eternal life.

656. And though by these means the powerful arm of God desired to prepare me worthily from my Immaculate Conception for the Incarnation of the Word in my womb, and to sanctify and form my faculties and senses for the dealings and communication with my Son, nevertheless if other souls would dispose themselves in imitation of me, living not according to the flesh but according to the spirit, free and untouched by earthly contagion, the Most High would show his fidelity to these souls as well, and would not deny them his blessings and favors according to the equity of his divine Providence.
